the main-exhibit buildings on the boulevard plain. Both structures will be faithful reproductions of the original. Spacious and imposing will be the great luthouse to be erected by the Travelers'

Protective Association. It will become the Exposition home of hundreds of thousands of commercial travelers from every civilized nation in the world. In appointment and service it will be modern and substantial,

The House of Hoo Hoo is another sumptuous club which the lumbermen and other members of the order have decided to make a permanent building, leaving it after the Fair to become a museum for the perpetuaion of memories associated with the greatest Exposition of all time.

These four notable mansions stand in one correinted group in the most broken portion of the great wooded plateau at the extreme eastern part of the World's Fair site and near the Forest Park fence. A minute's walk carries the visitor from one to the other. The Missouri State building is to the north of them.

TRAVELERS BUILDING SITE IS AWARDED.

It was late afternoon when President Francis and Director of Works Taylor approached the site of the Travelers' building. An enthusiastic building committee awaited them. President Francis made a speech. in which he formally transferred the location. The great army of commercial travel-vance agents of civilization, who followed the blazed trail of Lewis and Clark into the vast domain of the Louisiana Territory. In receiving the site, Charies H. Wickerd, chairman of the Building Committee, presented Murray Carleton, a member of the association and one of the Executive Committee of the World's Fair Company. Mr. Carleton referred humorously to his dual capacity and gave an earnest piedge that the first structure to be erected by the association at any world's fair would be a distinctive feature of the Exposition and a delight to those who were blinded by its glories.

The alloting parade, led by Captaly Me.

The alloting parade, led by Captain Mc-Namee's squad of mounted park police, Well's Band and a company of Jefferson Guards, moved to the site of the Temple of Fraternity. Representatives of all the fraternal societies in the country who have participated in the associated movement were grouped in the roped inclosure about the silken standard marking the site.

President Francis alluded to the fraternities as typical of that better feeling which is bringing all the nations of earth together. He presented the location to W. R. Eldson, vice president of the World's Fair

Fraternal Building Association. Mr. Eidson accepted the tender and introduced W. H. Miller, chairman of the Building Committee, as sponsor for the fraternities. The speaker reminded the audi-members of fraternities in America, which had paid out for the benefits of widows and orphans over $50,000,000.
